

Who's going to Llihrednuht this month?

Most of us don't really like to run Thunderhill backwards because of several reasons but this time it seems that the PRC is going to be there so that means we don't have to run with the crowded Group A.

Just curious as to see who might consider going for this race on May 22nd. I wasn't planning on going but the wife kind of gave me the green light if I want to.

Is there power in the paddock at Thunderhill?

I know there is a power plug where we parked at the last race which is very close to the hot pit exit. Between the entrance and exit of the hot pit, there is a tree and just behind it, there is an electrical box for hookup.

There is power but the slots with them go quick. If the paddock map for this weekend is the same as last time then we should be in the same spot Sid mentioned (and so have 1 power point).

Sid, are you going to bring your grill to the race? Since I'll be solo on this one, I plan to stay in my trailer. I can do a Costco run before the weekend and bring some food up if we have a count of everyone going.

Are you guys staying at the track?

The race schedule has us warming up, qualifying early and then the race is very early afternoon on both days. I can definitely bring the grill and try it out. Ivan and I just picked up an enclosed trailer so I can keep it with us to use whenever we go racing. Last time Chuck Buzetti bought a Chipotle marinated tri tip from Costco and it was good. We can fire up the grill for Saturday lunch/dinner.

If everyone else is staying at the track, I most likely will do the same. Let's potluck everything and make a list of what we want to eat or bring to share.
